

Boggart Hole Clough

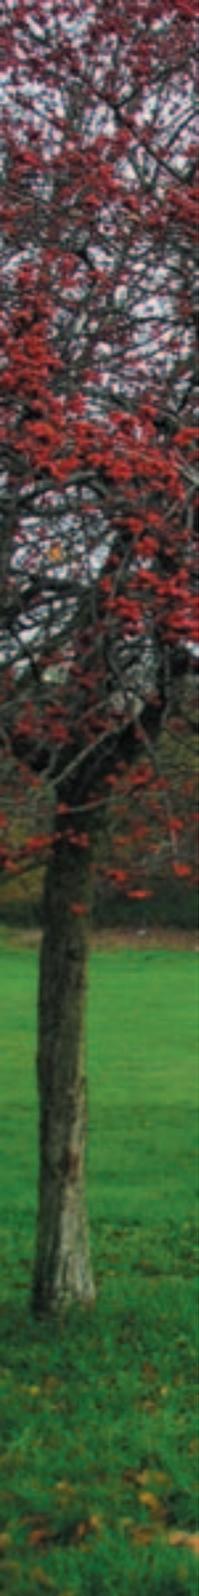

Situated in Moston, North Manchester, Boggart Hole Clough not only boasts a range of activities; it is also a beautiful haven with many wooded areas and natural valleys.

The Clough contains a variety of habitats. The woodland, meadows and lake provide important refuges for local wildlife. Squirrels and rabbits are common and a wide variety of birds and waterfowl can be seen on the clough.

Originally a deer forest, the Clough has a long history. Cromwell is reported to have camped in this area, giving rise to the major Cloughs' name (Oliver).

In 1914 the Clough was the setting for an experiment that gave free access of the park's facilities to poor children in the summer. This tradition still continues today with some activities.
